PALMER ELECTED.

He Will Represent Illinois in the United States Senate.

THE LONG CONTEST ENDED.

After One Hundred and Fifty-Four Ballots an Agreement is Reached by a Majority of the Illinois Legislature. Brief Biographical Sketch of Mr. Palmer's Life.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., March 12.—It appeared to be a foregone conclusion yesterday morning that Gen. John M. Palmer would be elected United States senator at noon by the solid 101 Democratic votes of the joint assembly, assisted by those of two of the Farmers' Mutual Benefit association men, Moore and Cockrell. But the Republicans were not ready to go down without a struggle. They held a caucus to see if they could not at least kill one Democratic candidate. To that end, the steering committee was empowered to handle the matter as it might think best.

That committee held a consultation and at its conclusion sent for Representative Moore, one of the Farmers' Mutual Benefit association men, and offered him the solid Republican vote of 101 if he and his two colleagues, Cockrell and Hall, would join them. This offer was considered good politics in any event, if accepted, it would defeat Gen. Palmer and put the Farmers' Mutual Benefit association under deep obligations to the Republicans; if refused, it would put the farmers in the anomalous position of refusing to help elect a farmer.

Moore was tempting but Moore did not lose his head. He said: "I regret to be compelled to disappoint you, gentlemen, but you either come too late. Accepting eight votes is in vain for 101 Democrats support Cockrell and myself have decided to give our votes to Gen. Palmer, and have added our signatures to an address to that effect. In these same kindness and fairness that many of your party have been in this, but now I can join you only to the one line—to cast my vote today for John M. Palmer in accordance with my pledge. I thank you for the honor which you extended and am yours of my best wishes for success."

The steering committee in discussing the situation finally decided to give their vote to Moore, the chairman of the steering committee in recognition of his services as leader in case every member would pledge himself to obey the majority of the members.

Nothing was then available in the Republican camp to prevent the public announcement being made by a strong majority that Gen. John M. Palmer would be elected United States senator at noon by the solid 101 Democratic votes of the joint assembly, assisted by those of two of the Farmers' Mutual Benefit association men, Moore and Cockrell. But the Republicans were not ready to go down

HERE is another knockout for Gov. Campbell. A telegram this afternoon announces that the supreme court of Ohio has decided the Cincinnati Board of City Affairs unconstitutional.

THE coming municipal election still fails to excite any great interest, but still there is enough going on to suggest that the soup is simmering, and there will be several candidates in it after election.

THE Elliotts have been indicted for murder in the first degree. Now will follow a long and interesting trial, the result of which will be anxiously awaited. There will be an universal hope that the men will receive justice and nothing else, as the investigation determines.

THE amendment to the Rawlings bill seems to have been a satisfactory outcome of that much-feared measure. The most general and objectionable fear was from the effects it would have in throwing working men out of employment during the winter season. This feature would be acutely felt in Marion, and its elimination will be welcomed here by those who have the welfare of the city at heart. Some credit is due Messrs. Huber and Hopkins for volunteering their services and joining those who used their influence against the obnoxious bill.

"The Runaway Wife."

[Cincinnati Enquirer.]

McKee Rankin's beautiful play, "The Runaway Wife," packed the Harris yesterday, matinee and night. The play is a very strong one of every day life, and the cast is exceptionally good, as it should be, and must be, to interpret the various well-drawn characters introduced by the authors. It tells a pathetic story of an artist whose family is broken up by a sister-in-law. Mr. Frank Evans, a sterling and forcible actor, took the character of the artist with great credit.

Miss Eda Clayton, a very handsome woman, gave a correct and interesting impersonation of Lady Alice. Harry S. Parker played Dr. Prescott effectively, while the remainder of the company furnished strong support, and the management had the drama nicely mounted. Little Lottie, a truly remarkable "child wonder" of only 4 years, created great enthusiasm with her songs.

"The Runaway Wife" will be at Music Hall Saturday night.

Mrs. Emmet Drake Dead.

The very sad news reached this city Wednesday evening announcing the death at Portland, Oregon, of Mrs. Emmet Drake, which occurred at 8:30 that same evening, of intestinal hemorrhage. Mr. Drake's folks here had received information Sunday, stating that they were in their usual good health. Death was quite sudden, and a sad blow to the young husband, who will have the deep sympathy of a large circle of friends here. Mr. and Mrs. Drake were married at Nevada, O., last September, and the couple left shortly afterward for Portland.

Deceased was about 20 years of age. It is possible the remains will be brought here for burial, but particulars have not been announced as yet.

THE ELKS' BENEFIT

BLACK FACES, ACT, SONG AND GROTESQUE MOVEMENTS.

A Packed House and a Delighted Audience Greet the Entertainers. Dee, Burke and Randall Enthusiastic (By Request). Something About the Special Features of the Evening.

The long expected Elks' benefit is over. It was a success, artistically and financially. Music Hall was jammed to the doors Wednesday evening, by the friends of Marion Lodge, B. P. O. E., who were attracted to the hall with the anticipation of being entertained, and that they really got what they were after was attested by the enthusiasm and applause which greeted the features of the entertainment.

Shortly after 8 o'clock the curtain went up on a stage full of black faces, grouped gracefully in the familiar semi-circle of minstrelsy, back of which and above was stationed Braun's Upper Sandusky orchestra, which furnished the music and did it well. Still back of these and towering above sat another row of dusky, heavy-weight warriors, who posed for effect and produced it. Such was the picture of the first part, enhanced by scenery especially painted for the purpose.

On the ends were Dee, Thatcher, Blaich and Beale to the right, and Burke, Steiger, Adams and Beicher to the left. They made great teams, and with Art Bryant, who was an imposing interlocutor, over an hour was pleasantly whiled away with songs, choruses and jokes that brought down the house. Among these was Blaich's song, which took immensely, and George Ufler, too, in his pleasant tenor, received an encore.

After the first part followed the introduction of the specialties. Among these Master Willie Randall appeared in his contortion acts, and he proved really a wonder, and his graceful but difficult movements were almost continually applauded.

Messrs. George Ufler, J. F. Leffler, W. G. Slaute and J. J. Woodard sang a quartet, "Sunrise," and were compelled to repeat it in answer to the encore received.

Dee and Burke appeared in their black face comicalities, and with song and dance extended, if possible, their popularity with their friends at home. The boys are a great team, and Marion will always welcome their appearance. But their greatest is the sidesaw in fun act, "Nobody at Home," in which they are joined by Randall. This is the cabin act, and the cabin is a novel invention of the boys, which has proven a taking feature abroad. It is a great aid to their rough-and-tumble performance, and sets off the grotesque pictures with a pleasing charm that takes and takes immensely, too.

Mr. Art Bryant gave a recitation that brought him much applause. He was certainly at his best Wednesday night.

The two Georges, McMurray and Ufler, in their musical specialty, came in for a share of the plaudits of an indulgent audience. They were really a surprise to those who had not thought of the young men in that line of entertainment.

Dr. Adams appeared as the sockless senator from Seneca, and addressed the audience on Marion, its beauties, etc. The doctor made himself a close rival of Quinn Chapel orators. We should not forget, either, to mention the prominence of Ed. G. Steiger as one of the entertainers of the evening.

But the Amazonians—and those costumes—in their drill, furnished the climax of the performance. George Turner, the electrician, had prepared a surprise in the way of an electric light arc above the stage, and the beautiful illumination set off the figures of the Amazonians to a charming degree. The drill was perfect, and the selection of Col Charles Sweney as the premier, was a happy hit, as was no less that of Shorty Jacobs, the bugler from Prospect. The drill was perfect in detail and figure, the maneuvers well accomplished, while the gay costuming added to the effect.

The Elks should be congratulated on the complete success of their benefit performance, for as such it was universally accepted by the large audience present.

THE RAILROAD BILL.

It Passed the Senate Wednesday with Another Amendment.

LaRue.

March, so far, seems rough.

The Scioto has narrowed down to the channel.

Late freezes is fading the wheat fields. Corn and oats are selling high. Some farmers have had none for their horses for some time. Hay is plenty; will not be so plenty 1st of May.

W. H. Sprague intends to move back to LaRue.

T. P. Bodd and Winslow started on a great western trip. When 150 miles on their way they right-about-faced, and struck for LaRue, fully satisfied that LaRue is a choice spot and the place for them while they dwell here below.

The Rush failure is not showing up favorable for them. Henry is going to move out near Scott Town on the forty acres he deeded to his mother in-law before he made an assignment. Don't know what Fred is going to do—live on his set-off, perhaps, while it lasts.

The Baptists are talking of buying a parsonage for their preacher. Religion in LaRue is going to be expensive, considering the material.

Empty houses are being looked up; no difference about the rent if plenty of time is given to pay in, or if it can be paid by prom ses or idle gassing, or telling of their bad luck or losses they had met with, or where they missed it by not doing so and so. Some will start out, go to a store and say I will thus and so, but can't pay today, [illegible] a few days; have money due me, will get it in a few days. Well they get the b'l. After standing for a year or two they will say, I will pay when I get ready and you can't make me collect it if you can. Such [illegible] don't intend to ever pay. Another will ask to borrow $20 for a year; can't spare it just [illegible] for six months then I will pay promptly if I have to sell my [illegible] I got the money but never intended [illegible] I would rather have an honest [illegible] Yet [illegible] have patronized them [illegible] If I was the poster [illegible] Lemon Wood [illegible] Pat Murphy's chicken [illegible]

Times Are Hard.

I am told that there has not been a time in years when so many persons have been out of work as now. I know the big corporations, the managers of railroad and coal companies, have been cut at $25,000 a month salary, and this is but one of many instances. In spite of this state of affairs there are fewer strikes and lockouts than usual, which shows, I guess, that people who have work but want to work do not desire to [illegible] by begging.—Brooklyn Life.

Not a Classic.

Daughter—What a writer is this?

Cultured Mother—Mrs. C., this would hardly have been regarded as winter when I was [illegible] Many a time the snow drifts were [illegible] that we had to tunnel through.

Daughter—Why, I supposed this was a regular [illegible] formed winter.

Cultured Mother—Ah, no, my dear. This is only a renaissance.—Good News.

New Neckwear for Men.

The correct collar for [illegible] season will be that of moderate height, rather with the turn over flaps, vulgarly known as "white wings," or that set straight with an inch spring in front. The points yield to the natural pressure of the chin, which has the effect of giving one a collar with natural turn over ends. The turn down collar will certainly have its place, but not prominently until the summer season has set in. For spring proper the two shapes we have mentioned will be the most generally seen on the well dressed man.

In neck dressing there has been quite a reaction, which can trace its origin to the vulgar extremes attained by the dude in his efforts to be ultra-fashionable. The small two and one-fourth inch four-in-hand tied tight, and its counterpart, the made up knot, in neat, small knots, as well as the moderate size puff scarf, will be among the correct things. The scarf should be of such a size that a little of the plain, white shirt will show on either side of it. It is not considered good taste to cover one's entire shirt bosom with a splashy lot of silk.

The Ascot scarf, in moderate widths, is also a good shape. In neckwear silks, extracted twills and simple fabrics of light texture, with refined colored grounds, such as navy blue, white and other neat colors, with effects that are neither large nor loud, but run to fine, delicate traceries, small dots of wee, little conventional designs, will be most correct.—Haberdasher.

When You Need Your Brain No Longer.

If, when you open your mail, dear reader, you receive a polite request for your brain, do not be astonished. The explanation is this: A number of scientific men have formed an organization the purpose of which is to take the brains of distinguished persons after death and study them, with a view to fuller knowledge both of medicine and mind. Dr. Joseph Leidy is president of the organization and Dr. Pepper secretary. Both are of Philadelphia. A large number of persons have already promised to allow their brains to be examined when they have no further use for them, and among these persons is the Rev. Phillips Brooks, of Boston.

Letters requesting brains have been sent out to nearly all the notable men and women of the country. Next summer, at the meeting in Washington of the congress of physicians and surgeons, this organization will be perfected, and associate members in the different cities will be authorized. When that is done you can do your family physician a special honor by bequeathing to him your brain, which he will examine and report on or perhaps forward it to the specialists in Philadelphia.—Pittsburg Times.

A Mayor on His Knees.

Has the ancient city of Moscow gone down on its knees to the merchant Jermokeiff? This is the question now agitating Moscow society. It seems that a subscription for a certain charity was being raised in Moscow, and of the million rubles required there was a deficit of 300,000. The mayor bethought him to make an appeal to a rich merchant of his acquaintance for the required sum. He did so; the first time in vain. But on another visit the merchant said: "Go down on your knees and beg me to give you the money." "And why not?" returned the mayor. Like Lady Godiva, he sacrificed his pride and gained the money for the town.

And now society is much concerned to know if its honor was lost, and casuists are arguing on both sides of the question. Moscow has got something to talk about in the place of Mme. Patti, who refuses to come and sing.—Cor. London News.

A Martyr to Love.

A negro by the name of Alex Wood, a freight hand on the Brunswick and Western train, met a sudden and horrible death near Sumner a day or two since. The train was going toward Albany and had just pulled out of Sumner. Wood was on top of the cars and walking backward talking to some negro girls who stood near the track. One of these girls was Wood's sweetheart, and while he was feasting his eyes on her charms as the train moved off he reached the end of the car on which he was walking, and before he could realize his danger had fallen between it and the next car to the ground, and was crushed to death almost in an instant.—Savannah News.

Prayer in a Jury Room.

Something novel occurred in connection with the jury in the late Duncan case. After the case had been submitted to them and they filed into the jury room to consider their verdict it was suggested that the jury engage in prayer before taking a ballot. This suggestion met with favor, and the jurors knelt down on the floor, while R. J. McArdle, the tailor, petitioned the Throne of Grace for divine guidance in their deliberations. At the conclusion of the prayer the jury took a ballot and the doom of Anthony Duncan was sealed.—Lexington (Ky.) Gazette.

MAKING IT PLEASANT.

Would Do the Best He Could, but There Was an Obstacle.

On account of a couple of pounds of extra [illegible] at the wrong end of Pennsylvania, and as there was no public house in the hamlet [illegible] I had to go home with him. He spoke [illegible] like one asleep in the darkness, and I [illegible] and to guide [illegible]

"Stranger, a couple I ought to [illegible] you——"

"What?" I asked as he [illegible]

"Well, never mind. Come along in."

He took me into the front room, where [illegible] to be in a state of [illegible] ly. As we entered there [illegible] from an adjoining room [illegible]

"It's only a [illegible] ing the oldest [illegible] ears for [illegible] her. Let me [illegible] her."

He had scarcely taken it when a boy was heard whooping, and he explained:

"It's only my wife pulling young Tim's hair for [illegible] ing into mischief."

The whooping was followed by a yell and a howl, and my host calmly explained:

"One of the dogs got in the way, you see, and she hit him."

I was trying to make his poor [illegible] less embarrassing, when there were two yells in quick succession, followed by a scramble, and I [illegible] crossed his legs and remarked:

"The twins was probably hooking victuals off the table and got caught at it."

Half a minute later, just as I had got ready to ask about the crops in that locality, the door was opened and a woman, who had a fork in one hand and a baby on her shoulder, bounced in and shouted out:

"You misery, lazy Jim Murdock, if you don't help [illegible] of those hogs I'll——"

She saw me and stopped and retreated and when she had gone the husband explained:

"That's what I was going to tell you the grass that we'd have to take chances of her being in a quarrum. She's got one [illegible] if you don't mind being called squint-eyed, bald headed, gander shanked and bow legged, and if you can kick the dogs off when she sets 'em on, and put up with the children cussing over you, I'll try and make it pleasant otherwise."—New York Sun.

Overheard.

"I love her," he said, and she said
She loved him very well,
And yet it was not to be matter if
He were a shade more swell.

He took her to the play one night
And felt he'd met his fate,
She said she'd had a good time, but
His hat was not on straight.

And after they'd been to a ball,
With tearful eyes she wrote
She'd had a splendid time, but, oh!
That speck upon his coat!

"I love you, dear," he said at last.
The maiden sighed, "I had
I hope you too, but, oh, dear me!
Your pedigree's up behind."

Stranger—For the cigar. I gave it to my uncle.—Clothier and Furnisher.

Waiting and Watching.

What cups of hope sad hearts will glean
When Bridget takes the can
And seeks, intent on kerosene,
The corner grocery man.

And breathlessly when day is near,
And Bridget toils herein,
We strain each ear in hope to hear
A grater explosive din.

But still we hope, and still in vain—
She rarely sets off Fate,
And we must bear and not complain,
And ever wish and wait.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, and often leads to self-destruction. Distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels, are some of the more common symptoms. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful, persistent attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet surely and efficiently. It tones the stomach and other organs, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, and by thus overcoming the local symptoms removes the symptomatic effects of the disease, banishes the headache, and refreshes the tired mind.

Distress After Eating

Sick Headache

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness, or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble, I think, was aggravated by my business, which is that of a painter, and from being more or less shut up in a room with fresh paint. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla—took three bottles. It did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." TALES OF CONGRESSMEN.

MR. STONE, OF KENTUCKY, AND HOW HE WAS RESCUED.

Bluff George Tillman—When Senator Berry Was a School Teacher—An Unidentified Congressman—A Romance in the Life of Every Statesman.

[Special Correspondence.]

WASHINGTON, March 9.—When we sat in the gallery of the house and senate a week or so ago and watched the closing proceedings of the Fifty-first congress, we noticed a common appearance, weary, toil-worn look of men that we looked for. Only silly one would not think there was much except the prosaic and commonplace in those statesmen. But there are those gleams of sunshine in life's memories, I believe, that in the [illegible] of them here were incidents [illegible] of the dramatic or the sentiment[illegible] possess have their romances, like [illegible] after all. For instance, one [illegible] like his mate Pat Eye Mr. Stone, [illegible], who has long been one of the [illegible] men on the floor of the [illegible]

[illegible] tall, big framed man, with a [illegible] head and a broad smile—why are [illegible] men always good natured, and [illegible]—moving around the hall on a crutch, [illegible] joking with this member or [illegible] and then bringing upon the [illegible] favorite little daughter. Thus you [illegible] you our first hero. That [illegible]! But for it this story would not [illegible] told. At least Mr. Stone would [illegible] in it. A quarter of a century [illegible] Mr. Stone was a strapping lad on his [illegible]'s farm in Kentucky. When the war [illegible] the states broke out he concluded, [illegible] standing his youthfulness, to take [illegible] in the scrimmage, as did so many [illegible] boys and striplings of the day. [illegible] the young Stone enlisted on it is [illegible] to say in this story. It is [illegible] to say that one summer evening, [illegible] was setting behind a bank of [illegible] and smoke rising from a battle field [illegible] far from the border line between Kentucky and Tennessee, the farmer's lad [illegible] himself lying flat on his back, alone [illegible] bit of underbrush, and with his life's [illegible] pouring out of a gaping wound in [illegible]. Presently he began to feel faint [illegible] go way, and his previous efforts to [illegible] away having resulted in failure, he [illegible] himself to the comforting embrace [illegible] the goddess of slumber. Without doubt [illegible] this have been his last sleep had not [illegible] goddess happened that way.

A young woman, the daughter of a farmer living near the battlefield, was [illegible] what timidly going across lots to a neighbor's house when she stumbled upon the body of a young soldier, battle stained [illegible] bloody. At first she thought him dead, [illegible] about to pass on with a shudder [illegible] some irresistible impulse drew her toward the still and ghastly body. It is [illegible] necessary to tell the remainder of the story. It is a romance which the veriest [illegible] can complete without knowing the facts. The young girl's impulse to turn back [illegible] whatever it was, saved the life of young soldier Stone, who lay there fast [illegible] to death. She quickly discovered that he was alive, and lost no time in having him conveyed to her father's house and his wound attended by surgeons. His life was saved but the limb was ultimately lost. And the young woman, who nursed her patient through long but not weary months? Why, of course, she is the mother of the pretty little girl whom we saw last week playing with her father's crutch on the floor of the house of representatives.

Just before the adjournment of congress I saw on the floor of the senate a man about whom many romances have been woven, some of them entitled to respect as being of real life. It was Senator-elect Irby, of South Carolina, who has succeeded to the title and the seat so long possessed by brave old Wade Hampton. When Mr. Irby was a much younger man than he is now he was rather wild and reckless. Becoming involved in some difficulty in his native state, his father thought it best for him to go away for a time till the troubled waters could become calm. Accordingly the young man was sent out to Arkansas, where he visited a former friend of his father, Dr. Jacques. For a joke he assumed a fictitious name, just to surprise his father's friends, and as Mrs. Jacques had not seen Irby since he was a small boy, she said to the stranger on his arrival at her door, "So you are from the old state of South Carolina? I wonder if you knew the Irbys? You did? Well, I want to inquire about them Irby boys. Their pa and ma were just as nice folks as ever lived, but them boys were scamps if there ever were any. I shouldn't be a bit surprised to hear they had all been hung." At this juncture the new senator, who tells the story on himself, confessed his identity, and promised the good woman he would, on returning home, take warning from her, and try to live such a life thereafter that the Irbys should not get him.

This pretty little story calls to mind a romance in the career of another South Carolina statesman, none other than bluff old George Tillman, one of the most honest, highly respected and able men in the delegation from that state. Like the new senator from South Carolina, Mr. Tillman when a young man was inclined to be wild and reckless. After the fashion of most of the young men of his day and many of those of this, he played cards, even gambled and sometimes imbibed of strong drink. On one occasion he became involved in a quarrel with a man at the card table. Young Tillman was sitting in a game of poker with one or two friends when a [illegible] approaching, a man standing, who was not engaged in the game and with whom Tillman had not been on good terms, made an offensive remark. Tillman resented the interference, and, on the spur of the moment, repeated with such emphasis as was intended to insult, the [illegible] he had made from the table and with [illegible] movements as quick as a flash drew his knife into the heart of his enemy. Of course there was hot and furious [illegible], and [illegible] young Tillman escaped from the scene. During his absence he was [illegible] South Carolina law and [illegible] In a year or two, by dint of [illegible] and friends, Tillman returned to South Carolina [illegible] up to the authorities. He was [illegible] and by the governor, and [illegible] Washington, where a career [illegible] was elected to congress and finally to the senate, where he has been some ten years or more, honored and distinguished [illegible]

The [illegible] romance in the career of [illegible] connected with [illegible] than [illegible] of [illegible] in which [illegible] from the [illegible] est [illegible] marriage [illegible] in old [illegible] are in America that of commonplace because [illegible] plan. I could write forty [illegible] about [illegible] of romance in the history of our public men, from the millionaire

Sawyer, who [illegible] at [illegible] suits to [illegible] the news [illegible] North [illegible] Mr. Hamilton, who was once a [illegible] printer, and a very good printer, too, [illegible] journeymen were likely [illegible] in the old days. But we are trying to avoid the commonplace.

A few weeks ago Senator Berry, of Arkansas, in a speech in the senate [illegible] attracted a good deal of attention. Call the letters in commendation of the [illegible] received by the senator more pleased him more than one from his [illegible]. Thereby hangs a tale. Senator Berry was a native of Mississippi, and when a mere lad of 15 or 16—an ignorant country boy without many advantages or much hope in life—enlisted in the Confederate army, partly because he hadn't anything else to do. In the battle of Corinth he lost a leg, and when he was well enough to leave the hospital found an opportunity to [illegible] at Ozark, Ark., doing "chores" for his board while pursuing his studies. Afterward he moved to Carroll county and became a school teacher at the magnificent salary of $12 a month; but out of this he managed to save something, as he had a special and very dear object in view, which was nothing less than union in matrimony with a fair young creature of Ozark. The fair young creature was willing, but her papa was not. He was not going to have his daughter throw herself away on a penniless schoolmaster. The following chapter the average reader will be able to guess without a hint from me. The future senator closed his school, crossed the mountains and with the aid of a trusty friend and a ladder stole the girl from a second story window and married her before the stern parent could interfere.

Not long afterward the young school master was elected to the legislature. He made a good record here, and was finally elected speaker of the house of representatives. Still the father of his wife refused to forgive. The wife of the future senator and her children visited frequently at her father's homestead, but the future senator himself waited and waited in vain for an invitation thither. Four or five years later young Berry was elected circuit judge, but still no forgiveness came from the relentless old gentleman at Ozark. "My son-in-law, Judge Berry," he would say to his friends, but for the judge himself he had not a word. Nine years ago, after he had been married some twelve or fifteen years, Mr. Berry's friends nominated him for governor of Arkansas and elected him by a mere trifle of 9,000 majority. This was more than the obstinate father-in-law could endure. When he heard the result of the election he sat down and wrote a letter to his son-in-law, the governor elect, in which he declared his daughter had been a better judge of human nature than himself, and that it would give him great pleasure to welcome the new governor to his house. Since that day the old gentleman and the governor, now the senator, have been the warmest kind of friends.

The story which I have told hereinbefore about Congressman Tillman's adventure [illegible] I had a few weeks ago with Mr. E. G. Asay, of Chicago, while sitting in Senator Farwell's committee room at the Capitol. Mr. Asay was for many years the leading criminal lawyer of Chicago, and his fame extended all over the west and northwest. He was one of the few men whom that great editor, William F. Storey, the founder of The Chicago Times, took to his heart. "In the house of representatives to-day," said Mr. Asay, "I saw a man whose face brought back to me one of the most dramatic incidents of my professional career. Years ago I was called to a southern state to defend a young man who had been charged with murder. My client had done nothing but to run his knife through the heart of an enemy, literally cutting that organ in halves. There was no doubt of the man's guilt, and I was at my wits' end for an argument to make before the jury. The guilty man was well connected, was a graduate of Harvard college, and those things were in his favor; but he had killed a man of his own sort, and the friends of the victim were clamoring for justice. In his charge to the jury the judge ruled that but one verdict was possible—murder in the first degree. Manslaughter, he said, was out of the question. I expostulated with the judge, and at the close of court, before the jury had been sent out, he asked me to come up to his house that night and talk the matter over with him. I did so, and we argued the legal points involved till I had succeeded in convincing the judge of his error.

"In court next day he resumed his charge to the jury, corrected his former instruction and gave me a chance to make an address on the changed phase of the case. If I ever worked hard for a man I did for that client of mine. With all the eloquence and persuasiveness I possessed I begged the gentlemen of the jury to convict my client of manslaughter, though I felt down in my heart there was but one thing they could do, and that was to send him to the gallows for murder in the first degree. When the jury retired I was willing to wager in my way my man would hang. I scarcely dared hope they would let him off with manslaughter. When the verdict came in it was—what do you suppose?—acquittal. Yes, my client walked out of court a free man. Meeting one of the jurymen afterward, I asked him how they had arrived at such a conclusion in view of the certain guilt of the accused.

"'Well,' he replied, 'you see how it is, stranger. Our jail is in such a wretched condition that there was some of us opposed to sentencing any gentleman to stay there while he was waiting to be hanged.' This is a true story," concluded Mr. Asay, "though many jokes with this remark of the jurymen's for a basis have been floating around the country."

"What became of the client who escaped so easily, Mr. Asay?"

"I knew you would ask that question, and I have been trying to answer you. Of course I [illegible] you his name, but I am willing to say that he is a highly respected man, occupying a distinguished position, and I [illegible] him very well. He [illegible] Washington for a number of [illegible]

MAY FRENCH SHELDON.

SOMETHING ABOUT HER LITERARY WORK.

Her Books Have Been Quite Popular, Especially Among Women, and Now That She Is Going to Africa Gossip About Her Is Timely.

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, March 9.—Some years ago there appeared a number of novels, written by Mrs. M. F. Sheldon, with such frequency as to indicate that the writer was a person of great fertility of invention. They attained a good deal of popularity, especially among women readers, and they were written by a woman who is perhaps one of the brightest, though not one of the most profound, of female writers of fiction of the present generation. Two of these novels—entitled "Herbert Severance" and "Jenny, the Circus Rider"—were so good as to call general attention to the writer, and they are still very popular. The authoress, Mrs. May French Sheldon, is in some respects a very remarkable woman, for, in addition to her literary gifts, she is an extremely attractive woman personally, and for a number of years was the belle of society in her home in Pittsburg, Pa. She is also well known in social circles in New York city.

In addition to her literary and personal charms Mrs. Sheldon is also a business woman of considerable capacity, and possesses a love of adventure and a fondness for exploration and healthful excitement which comes from doing daring deeds which distinguish her above all others of her sex. She has recently gained a much wider fame even than her novels brought her by undertaking an expedition into Central Africa, and only a short time ago she actually started upon this expedition; but on the threshold of the great wilderness she has met with some setbacks which have temporarily delayed the consummation of this most audacious purpose.

Mrs. Sheldon while living in New York met her husband, who is a very busy man, but who delights in his wife's audacity and who encourages her in her remarkable purpose. Mr. Sheldon is an Englishman, and soon after his marriage he took his wife to London. There he was devoted to the accumulation of a fortune, while she at first gave her attention to modeling and to sculpture. This work, while she delighted in it, was very injurious to her eyes, and Mrs. Sheldon was obliged to give it up. Her husband's business called him again to America, and they at one time lived in New Mexico and afterward in Cuba and in Central America. Here Mrs. Sheldon's literary impulse mastered her, and she wrote one or two interesting books, as well as a series of articles which were published in one of the New York newspapers, and which were distinguished for their brilliancy of style and the exquisite depiction of life and scenery as she had found them in those strange countries.

On their return to Europe Mrs. Sheldon busied herself with the translation of some of the French masterpieces of literature. She was the authorized translator of Flaubert's "Salambo," which many of the critics regard as the most exquisite specimen of historical romance which any French writer has given us. This translation was itself a work of art, being all the more difficult because Flaubert's style is as delicate, pure and delightful as anything in French literature. He is indeed regarded as the great master of style, and Mrs. Sheldon was able to convey an adequate suggestion of his power in her own translation.

It was while she was writing this translation that Mrs. Sheldon conceived the idea of undertaking an original historical romance herself. She had selected the theme, had the plot well thought out and the treatment of the story thoroughly considered, but she desired to get local coloring, and she therefore determined, after Stanley had shown how "Darkest Africa" could be penetrated, to go herself, so that she might see with her own eyes and get inspiration through her senses to be utilized in the writing of her romance.

Her husband, while regretting the loss of her society, was yet delighted with her boldness and her courage, and had abundant faith in her resources and her energy to accomplish that which she sought to obtain. Mrs. Sheldon will take as a companion a friend—a woman who is accomplished, educated, and who has some knowledge of medicine and botany. Besides this companion she will have a trustworthy body servant, and these three will make up the expedition, except that she expects to hire some Ethiopians as carriers.

Mrs. Sheldon pays the expenses of the entire expedition herself, and she declares that she has no idea of conquest, does not expect to win any honors as an explorer, but simply desires to get a view of inner Africa, and to make a study of the people and the curious fetishes she there discovers as only a woman accustomed to travel and sincere [illegible] can do. [illegible] is also said that there is a [illegible] and perhaps humor to be [illegible] in the views of African women, and [illegible] of clar[illegible] to make use of [illegible] in the work which she contemplates writing.

In finding the expedition has been one of the [illegible] of the hour, and while [illegible] are many who think Mrs. Sheldon will [illegible] who know her best believe that she will accomplish the undertaking, unless she is prevented by a sudden [illegible] of [illegible].

In this brief [illegible] Mrs. Sheldon's [illegible] and she has been [illegible] of Mrs. Sheldon's [illegible] has given her the advantage of his own experience in suggestions of how, when and where to travel.

Non-Conductors of Heat.

Ground cork and some other [illegible] and the sawdust of the soft woods as well as the charcoal made of these substances, are very good retainers of heat. Lampblack also works well. When the thing to be kept hot is at a very high temperature, some light, incombustible powders are very suitable. Among the best of these are fossil meal and the calcined magnesia and magnesium carbonate of the druggists. Fossil meal consists of the silicious skeletons of microscopic vegetables, called diatoms, exceedingly various in shape and size, the very largest of them hardly reaching the length of the hundredth of an inch. It is found abundantly in some peat meadows and in the bottoms of ponds. Both fossil meal and magnesium carbonate have been largely used in covering steam pipes.

Obviously, when the same light substance is tried in both the first and second apparatus above mentioned, and the results differ, it must be owing to the inability of the substance to hold the included air still in the first arrangement. So powdered plumbago or black lead, which is very slippery, shows nearly twice as much transmissive power in one case as in the other. Loosened asbestos fiber also lets through about twice as much heat in the vertical arrangement as in the horizontal. Yet this fiber may be split up exceedingly fine, but the great difference in its behavior as compared with cotton or wool must be owing much less to its own greater specific conducting power than to the smoothness and inelasticity of its fibers.—Professor John M. Ordway in Popular Science Monthly.

The Handkerchief in France.

Lace was used to ornament handkerchiefs in France as early as 1634. In 1648 they were embroidered and had tassels at each of the four corners. In the time of the Directory, that period of fashionable eccentricity, they underwent many vagaries. Those ladies who did not care to wear the pocket attached to the girdle and wished to have the hands at liberty tucked the fan into the belt, slid the purse into the corsage and had the handkerchief carried by a gallant, to whom it was necessary to apply when it happened to be needed. If the handkerchief carrier could not be found, or was insidiously flirting with another woman, and the nose imperatively demanded blowing, the case was serious.

When the French blow the nose, it should be remembered, it is for all it is worth. No one who has not witnessed the performance could ever believe the nasal passages possessed of such a sonorous quality, and when the effort is several times repeated one might easily imagine himself listening to the Angel Gabriel rehearsing for the last judgment. The French fashion in this respect is not to be recklessly imitated like Paris styles in laces, silks and satins, fans, dresses, bonnets and other things pertaining to female attire.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Victims by Thousands.

Records of great earthquakes fill a large space in the world's history, and instances where people have perished by thousands from this cause are mournfully numerous. An earthquake accompanied by a volcanic eruption destroyed the cities of Pompeii and Herculaneum and buried most of their inhabitants in the ruins in the year 79, A. D. The entire world was shaken from pinnacle to foundation stone in the year 543. In 557 Constantinople suffered terribly from an earthquake, which killed thousands of its inhabitants. In 742 an awful shock visited China, India, Persia and Palestine, killing hundreds of thousands of human beings, besides beasts beyond calculation.

In 1138, 20,000 person perished from an earthquake shock in Syria alone; in 1268, 60,000 were killed or buried alive in Cilicia. In 1456, 40,000 were killed in Naples. In 1531 Lisbon, Portugal, had her first great shock—that which killed 30,000 people. In 1626 Naples was again visited and had 70,000 of her people taken away by the earthquake demon. The next year the Schamaki was constantly rocked by earthquakes for three months, during which time 80,000 persons were killed.—St. Louis Republic.

A Difference in Boys.

There is a vast difference between the ways and ideas of amusement of the small boy uptown and the small boy downtown who makes his living by selling papers, shining muddy boots or being messenger. For instance, the downtown newsboy scorns to throw snowballs as a usual thing. He will shake dice, "match" coppers or smoke cigarettes and discuss some melodrama playing in his favorite Bowery theatre, but he absolutely declines to throw snowballs. On the other hand, his more innocent brother seven or eight miles higher up on the island still clings to the good old fashioned sport of "pasting" everything and everybody with a snowball. That's all association, of course.—New York Tribune.

Borrowed Skates Saved Mr. Flower's Life.

"Like all boys, I had my trials and vicissitudes," said Mr. Roswell P. Flower. "While skating one day I slid into an airhole. I would have drowned had not my companion, at considerable risk to himself, succeeded in rescuing me after several attempts, during which he was more than once on the point of sliding in with me. When we reached the village he tried to say that he could not have pulled me out if he had had his skates on, but what he eventually did say was that he would have let me sink if I had not had his skates on."—Epoch.

Eggs of Crabs and Lobsters.

Crabs and lobsters are hatched from eggs, resembling upon birth nothing so much as the animalculæ shown by the microscope in a drop of ditch water. They are as unlike the shellfish they are to become in mature life as a grub is unlike a butterfly. In the case of the crab the egg clusters are attached beneath the animal after extrusion, while with the lobster they become fastened to the tail, which, by its fanning motion, increases the stream of oxygenated air through and among the ova.—Washington Star.

THE CURATE'S STORY.

It Was Not in His Usual Vein, but Far More Entertaining.

Here is a choice bit from Jerome K. Jerome's latest book, "Told After Supper." It is the story of a party made up exclusively of men, and the time is Christmas eve:

"We had some more punch and then the curate told us a story. I could not make head or tail of the curate's story, so I cannot retail it to you. We none of us could make head or tail of that story. It was a good story enough, so far as material went. There seemed to be an enormous amount of plot, and enough incident to have made a dozen novels. I never before heard a story containing so much incident, nor dealing with so many varied characters.

"I should suppose that every human being our curate had ever known or met, or even heard of, was brought into that story. There were simply hundreds of them. Every five seconds he would introduce a completely fresh collection of characters, accompanied by a brand new set of incidents.

"This was the sort of story it was:

"'Well, then my uncle went into the garden and got his gun, but of course it wasn't there, and Scroggius said he didn't believe it.'

"'Didn't believe what? Who's Scroggius?'

"'Scroggius! Oh, why, he was the other man, you know. It was his wife'——

"'What was his wife? What's she got to do with it?'

"'Why, that's what I'm telling you. It was she that found the hat. She'd come up with her cousin to London—her cousin was my sister-in-law, and the other niece had married a man named Evans, and Evans, after it was all over, had taken the box around to Mr. Jacobs, because Jacobs' father had seen the man when he was alive, and when he was dead Joseph'——

"'Now look here, never you mind Evans and the box. What's become of your uncle and the gun?'

"'The gun! What gun?'

"'Why, the gun your uncle used to keep in the garden, and that wasn't there. What did he do with it? Did he kill any of these people with it—any of these Jacobses and Evanses and Scroggiuses and Josephses? Because if so it was a good and useful work, and we should enjoy hearing about it.'

"'No—oh, no—how could he? He had been built up alive in the wall, you know, and when Edward IV spoke to the abbot about it my sister said that in her then state of health she could not and would not, as it was endangering the child's life. So they christened it Horatio, after her own son, who had been killed at Waterloo before he was born, and Lord Napier himself said'——

"'Look here, do you know what you are talking about?' we asked him at this point.

"He said no, but he knew it was every word of it true, because his aunt had seen it herself. Whereupon we covered him over with the tablecloth and he went to sleep.

Act on a new principle—regulating the liver, stomach and bowels through the nerves. A new discovery. Dr. Miles' Pills speedily cure biliousness, bad taste, torpid liver, piles, constipation. Unequaled for men, women, children. Smallest, mildest, surest! Fifty doses, 25 cents. Sample free, at Denison & Co., and Hoberman & Co.

Young Pepper's Ornate Effort.

I made a speech in my youth in the Mohawk valley, when I was frisky with aurora borealis and rainbows. I was depicting the possibility of the ideal republic under the principles of the party which I loved, and when I concluded an old campaigner, an old timer, an old "spoilsman," stepped up to me and said:

"Chauncey, that speech had more frill than shirt."—From a Recent Speech.

Artful Hankinson.

Mr. Hankinson (looking at the clock)—I beg your pardon for tarrying so long, Miss Quickstep. I did not know it was so late.

Miss Quickstep—I shall be glad to have you tarry a while longer, Mr. Hankinson. You are the first young man I have ever met who thought 10 o'clock was late.—Chicago Tribune.

A Remedy in Kidney Affection.

"My kidneys were so affected I have been compelled to get up as much as ten times in one night. I had pains in my side, back and left shoulder, and when down could hardly rise. I was unable to bend my body without great pain. I tried Simmons Liver Regulator and my condition has improved so much that I hardly ever feel any of my old trouble." W. JOHNSON, Express Ag't, Macon, Ga.

A Suggestion.

"What did you say this was?" he asked as he dallied with his dessert.

"It is angel cake, dear," replied his wife, "but I'm afraid it is just a trifle heavy."

"It occurred to me while I was eating it," he responded, "that it might not have been greatly out of the way to call it 'fallen angel' cake."—Washington Post.

Not His Fault.

Father—James, why did you eat all the candy in the box I gave you? I said that you could only have three pieces.

James—Well, I know, father; but I couldn't help it. I've been making believe there was another little boy spending the day with me.—Smith & Gray's Monthly.

I used three bottles of "Mother's Friend," and when I was sick I never went to bed until 12:30, and my boy was born at 3 a. m. with scarcely any pain. I will do all I can in recommending it to expectant mothers. Your thankful friend,

MRS. B. F. WALTERHUS.

Cause for Thanksgiving.

Travers—Do you just feel the most fearful row with my tailor.

Dashaway—Seems to me you look very cheerful about it.

Travers—I do. You see I still owe him the money.—Clothier and Furnisher.

He Had Skated.

Maude—Did you ever try your hand at skating, Mr. Bunkers?

Bunkers—Yes—well—er—that is, my hand and several other parts.—New York Herald.

An Oft Repeated Event.

"This is Rosalie Brown's debut, isn't it?"

"Yes—her fifth."—Munsey's Weekly

The Secret of Success.
